

ATM Outsourcing

An alternative to ATM ownership

Maintaining and operating one or a fleet of ATMs can be a resource-intensive endeavor. In addition to the initial cost, financial institutions (FIs) must oversee the ongoing management of the connectivity, maintenance and servicing of each ATM. There are also the ongoing interactions with armored carriers, which can be time consuming.

Some FIs have found that the expense and risk of managing their own ATM network outweighs the benefits. In those cases, outsourcing this responsibility may be a viable option.

Complete, worry free ATM management

The reasons for outsourcing differ based on the size of an FI and their business strategy. No matter the reason, Cummins Allison has a network of partners that provide ATM outsourcing using our highly-reliable portfolio of ATMs.

Outsourcing covers every aspect of ATM management, from site prep and equipment procurement to system updates, cash management, compliance issues and maintenance. Outsourcing gives financial institutions the benefit of a single partner to manage all of these services, reducing the amount of time and effort it takes to oversee multiple third-party providers.

Why outsource?

Reduce operating costs: Leveraging a partner whose sole purpose is ATM ownership allows you to benefit from collective buying power and reduce operating costs.

Reduce stress on staff: Not only does outsourcing reduce your costs, it also frees your staff to focus on core competencies of servicing account clients to stimulate growth and revenue for your business.

Eliminate ongoing compliance challenges: Let someone else deal with the constant changes and updates for technology and compliance in matters related to software patches, security, and fraud protection. These rapidly-changing aspects are addressed by your provider.

Highlights

- Leverage a partner to manage and maintain ATMs and reduce your operating costs
- Outsourcing frees staff to focus on account holders and grow your business
- Let ATM experts deal with rapidly-changing technology and compliance matters

If outsourcing is the path you would like to pursue, let us tap into our network of providers and we'll get the ball rolling.
